

Newsweek Home >> Periscope

Newsweek Periscope

Subscribe Now | Make Newsweek Your Homepage | Newsletters | RSS

Exclusive: Secret Memo—Send to Be Tortured

Newsweek

Aug. 8, 2005 issue - An FBI agent warned superiors in a memo three years ago that U.S. officials who discussed plans to ship terror suspects to foreign nations that practice torture could be prosecuted for conspiring to violate U.S. law, according to a copy of the memo obtained by NEWSWEEK. The strongly worded memo, written by an FBI supervisor then assigned to Guantanamo, is the latest in a series of documents that have recently surfaced reflecting unease among some government lawyers and FBI agents over tactics being used in the war on terror. This memo appears to be the first that directly questions the legal premises of the Bush administration policy of "extraordinary rendition"—a secret program under which terror suspects are transferred to foreign countries that have been widely criticized for practicing torture.

Story continues below ↓

advertisement

In a memo forwarded to a senior FBI lawyer on Nov. 27, 2002, a supervisory special agent from the bureau's behavioral analysis unit offered a legal analysis of interrogation techniques that had been approved by Pentagon officials for use against a high-value Qaeda detainee. After objecting to techniques such as exploiting "phobias" like "the fear of dogs" or dripping water "to induce the misperception of drowning," the agent discussed a plan to send the detainee to Jordan, Egypt or an unspecified third country for interrogation. "In as much as the intent of this category is to utilize, outside the U.S., interrogation techniques which would violate [U.S. law] if committed in the U.S., it is a per se violation of the U.S. Torture Statute," the agent

Peter Muhly / AFP/Getty Images

'Extraordinary rendition': A prisoner at Camp X-Ray in Guantanamo Bay

RELATED STORIES | What's this?

- Terror Watch: From Downing Street to Capitol Hill
- A Letter to Our Readers
- More than one version of al-Qaida memo
- Downing St. memo explained
- NFL memo reminds teams about security

MOST POPULAR

Most Viewed - Top Rated - Most E-mailed

- America's Most Dangerous Drug
- The Fallout: 'I Felt My Face Just Melting'
- My Life as a Drug Dealer
- Murdoch Family Values
- A European Sahara?
- Most viewed on MSNBC.com

PERISCOPE

Newsweek

Subscribe Now

Periscope

National News

Politics

World News

War in Iraq

Business

Enterprise

Tech & Science

Healthbeat

Society

Entertainment

Tip Sheet

Columnists

Letters & Live

Talks

International Ed.

Multimedia/Photos

Search the Site

Search Archives

U.S. News

World News

Business

Sports

Entertainment

Tech / Science

Weather

Health

Travel

Blogs Etc.

Local News

Newsweek

Multimedia

News Video

Most Popular

NBC NEWS

MSNBC TV

Today Show

Nightly News

Meet the Press

Dateline NBC

Business

SUBSCRIPTIONS

- Subscribe
- Renew
- Change Address
- Give a Gift
- Manage Your Account

MORE

- Looking for a degree from a quality school?
Discover Newsweek distance learning.com

Sponsored Feature

- Newsweek showcase.com—your resource for health, education and business opportunities

wrote. "Discussing any plan which includes this category could be seen as a con-spiracy to violate [the Torture Statute]" and "would inculcate" everyone involved.

A senior FBI official, who asked not to be identified because the issue is sensitive, said the memo was not an official bureau legal conclusion. Its author was at Gitmo to advise on interrogation techniques, not to render legal opinions, the official said. (The memo's author, a former New York City prosecutor, declined to comment to NEWSWEEK.) But another senior U.S. law-enforcement official familiar with the memo, who also asked not to be identified, said the memo reflects concerns among many agents and lawyers about "rendition." Intel officials estimate that more than 100 terror suspects have been rendered to foreign countries by the CIA under a classified directive signed by President George W. Bush after 9/11. A senior U.S. intelligence official, who asked not to be identified because the program is classified, said rendering suspects to their country of origin can aid intel because local interrogators speak the language better and understand the cultural sensitivities of the suspects. "No one is sent anywhere for the purpose of being tortured," the official said. A Pentagon spokesman said the Defense Department does not engage in renditions, but officials have confirmed that 65 detainees have been transferred from Guantanamo for further detention or prosecution by foreign governments, including 29 to Pakistan, seven to Russia, five to Morocco and four to Saudi Arabia—countries the State Department criticizes for practicing torture.

—Michael Isikoff

© 2005 Newsweek, Inc.

Rate this story Low ★★★★★ High

Current rating: 4 by 253 users • View Top Rated stories

Print this

Email this

Blog this

MORE FROM NEWSWEEK PERISCOPE

Next → CW: Summer Pork Edition

- ▶ Memo Probes U.S. Policy on Terror Suspects
- CW: Summer Pork Edition
- London: Why Shoot to Kill?
- Soldiers: War on 'Milblogs'
- Laura Bush's Summer Reading Plan
- History: Probing 19th-Century Celebrity Deaths
- Science: A Suppressant for Hurricanes?
- Politics: Flap Over the Frist Flip

- Memo Probes U.S. Policy on Terror Suspects
- CW: Summer Pork Edition
- London: Why Shoot to Kill?
- Soldiers: War on 'Milblogs'

• More Periscope

NEWSLETTER

Sign up for our Web-Exclusive Alert

- Click here to have the latest from Newsweek delivered to your inbox

BLOG TALK

Read what bloggers are saying about this Newsweek article

SEARCH THE SITE